

OK College graduates contribute

B1 Courier
Apr 16

Twenty Okanagan College graduates work at Mackay Chartered Accountants in Kelowna.

“We encounter amazing stories (like that) every day,” said Okanagan College Alumni Association president Christina Ferreira, who works as a coordinator with the Okanagan Wine Festivals Society.

“We have examples of an office where there are 25 of our grads pursuing careers and a business where 37 people can trace their trades training to Okanagan College.”

With grads liberally scattered throughout the Valley and around the world, the college, in conjunction with the alumni association, has launched an Okanagan College Works campaign.

It’s designed to re-establish and strengthen ties with grads as well as highlight how grads are contributing to the region’s economy and culture.

It also showcases that employers can find many of the educated workers they are looking for locally.

Grads can log onto www.okanagan-collegeworks.ca to say where they are and what they’re up to.